

Mister Words Memoir Sample #1

His name is Raymon Grace. He's a mountain man from West Virginia. He's just a backwoods guy with a beard, a ten-inch knife, and a very special gift. And I was fortunate to find him.

When I returned from Peru to my condo in Orlando, I made a troubling discovery. Whatever had happened in my Ayahuasca experience that left me feeling so disturbed had taken up residence in my condo with me.

An entity.

Banging on walls, switching on lights, turning off TVs.

This continued for two or three weeks. Finally I'd had enough. On a trip to Cassadaga, a woman said that she was bringing in a "mountain man" from West Virginia. She told me he was a douser. Dousing, also sometimes called divining, is a spiritual art that uses a pendulum to provide information about spirits and entities, as well as to predict the future. I went to her house one night and there, looking every bit the part of a sage from the high country, stood Raymon Grace.

I had a private session. I told him where I'd been and about my Ayahuasca experience. Using his pendulum, he quickly ascertained the answer.

"You got something real bad," he said in somber tones. "A poltergeist." Apparently, this entity came back with me from Peru and latched right on because I offered no resistance — the salmonella had weakened my entire system.

"Do you want to come back to my condo and get rid of it?" I asked. "I'm happy to pay whatever you want."

"I don't need to go there; I can do it right here."

He took his pendulum and began working it back and forth. After a few minutes, he said, “It’s all going to be fine. I’m going to disperse it. It’s going to take a while; give it two weeks. It’ll be a little crazy when you get back there, but as each day passes, it’ll just go away.” Very slowly.

Sure enough, within two weeks the entity was gone and my house returned to normal.

Raymon is a fascinating man. He’s written a book called The Future is Yours, Do Something About it, which explains a great deal about the absorbing power of dousing. I highly recommend it.

Fortunately, Ramon was able to clear that unwanted entity from my life.

However, that did not mean I was free from outside powers making their presence known to me.

You’ve heard of UFOs, right?

Well, I’ve seen ’em.

And those ETs have been messing with me my whole life.
